12:50:52 From Amy : As I was driving to pick up my girls at my cousin's last night, I passed a lady walking with purpose. Something told me to turn around and offer her a ride. She had a slight limp. She was so grateful for the ride to her rundown camper. I asked her if she was safe. She broke down crying. She had just walked 11 miles, leaving her abuser who threatened to torture her and bury her with his excavator. She told me the street she walked from. I paused. I asked her if this man had been married and his wife had left him, taking her two children with her, about 4 years ago. She looked surprised and nodded her head. She whispered his first name. Sure enough, this man had attended my parents' little church and was very well versed in the Bible and Hebrew. When I found out from my father that his former wife had left with her children, I knew then he was abusive. He stopped going to church after that, but not before seeking the sympathy of my father and others about how sad he was his wife left & that she was mentally ill

12:58:28 From Amy : This gal that I helped, went to the courthouse first thing this morning (walked--because her broken down truck is at her abuser's property) She has a hearing in 5 minutes. The judge is my cousin who has her own history of abuse with her first husband. So grateful that God brought us together to get her help. God is good!
