11:51:20 From Alana van der Maas to Everyone:

Replying to "Even if it is a female judge?":

I think often, due to our society, we have the internalized belief that women are more emotional and less reasonable and so even if people don't realize they are thinking that, people tend to believe that men are probably being calm and reasonable so therefore more trustworthy. I feel that this probably happens with female judges also. I could be wrong about this, but it sort of makes sense to me.

Andrew Tate engages in strangulation as part of sex, and sadly has great influence on men. Especially younger men--but older as well. He boasts about it and acts it out on camera. He also enjoys rape and resistance. The more she doesn't want it, the more turned on he is. He is conditioning men and normalizing this.
